

Nikko AM NZ Bond Strategy

Monthly Update 30 April 2024

Assets are held in the Nikko AM Wholesale NZ Bond Fund. The Nikko AM NZ Bond Fund (retail) invest in units in the wholesale fund, which the commentary refers to.

Market Overview

- NZ bonds had a poor month as yields moved higher delivering flat to negative returns.
- There has been an increase in corporate issuance and deals have been well supported with underlying rates elevated.
- Looking forward we remain optimistic that bond returns will be supported by cash rate cuts later this year and longer rates moving lower.

Fund Highlights

- The fund had a negative return for the month as interest rates moved higher. Shorter maturity bonds performed better than longer maturities.
- We have increased duration when bonds have been higher in yield and believe locking in higher rates for longer will benefit returns.
- We like the higher yield of quality credit and expect the demand/supply dynamics to remain supportive.

Market Commentary

NZ bonds had flat to negative returns with interest rates moving higher as the market re-priced high cash rates for longer. Markets remain highly data reactive, and April was volatile as the jump in the US 10-year bond pressured our bonds higher. Fortunately, NZ bonds did regain some lost ground into month end after briefly making new 2024 highs. In terms of returns the move up in interest rates was the key driver of absolute and relative returns. At month end government yields finished as follows; 2yr +33 bps, 5yr +36 bps and 10yr +31 bps. For comparison swap maturities were 2yr +31 bps, 5yr +40 bps and 10yr +40 bps.

Looking at sectors NZ government bonds compressed in spread relative to swap rates after The Debt Management Office (DMO) successfully completed a reasonable amount of issuance in the first quarter. The star performer remains NZ credit which continued to perform well with margins stable and strong demand supported by underlying rates at attractive levels. Like other investors we have been happy to lock in higher yields for longer through quality credit on the view that rates will revisit lower levels over the medium term. In general, we see increases in rates at this late stage in the cycle as an opportunity rather than a threat. We do expect that inflation will decline back towards the RBNZ's target later this year which will likely see the market take rates lower again.

On a positive note, the RBNZ have been more conciliatory/less hawkish in their comments acknowledging they are making good progress toward achieving inflation objectives. This is important as the risk for further increases in the cash rate appears greatly diminished, however higher cash rates for longer could stall a sustainable move lower in rates.

We think it makes sense locking in higher rates for longer, but "keep some powder dry". We don't want to miss capital gains when rates fall, but keep in mind we need inflation lower for rate cuts to occur. Also, longer maturity NZ bonds are highly correlated with moves in the US. We expect there will be opportunities to add value through duration when bonds are cheaper or expensive in the range and we remain patient adding on cheapening moves.

Fund Commentary

The fund had a negative return and underperformed the Bloomberg NZ Composite benchmark. The move higher in interest rates was the main driver of absolute and relative returns. The benchmark had a meaningful extension in duration over the month, and we added some longer maturity bonds when yields were higher to slightly extend our relative position. The fund is positioned with a long duration with a view that the ultimate direction of rates is lower over the next 12-18 months. Our preference is to hold higher yielding quality credit, but we have added NZ government bonds when they look cheap relative to swap. NZ government bonds are approximately 2/3rds of the benchmark.
