

Nikko AM Global Equity Multi-Manager Hedged Strategy

Monthly Update 31 August 2024

Assets are held in the Nikko AM NZ Wholesale Global Equity Hedged Fund. The Nikko AM Global Equity Multi-Manager Hedged Fund (retail) invest in units in the wholesale fund, which the commentary refers to.

Market Overview

- Global equities sold off sharply over the first three trading days of the month after Bank of Japan raised rates. Disappointing US economic data further fuelled the sell-off, as investors began to worry about a hard landing in the US economy and risk-off sentiment hit equity markets.
- The sell-off was short lived and by the end of the month, most global equity indices had clawed back some of their initial losses.

Fund Highlights

- The underlying managers delivered mixed performance over the month; the growth manager WCM outperformed significantly, while quality manager NAME also delivered a strong performance, both were well ahead of the benchmark, +145 bps and +131 bps respectively. JP Morgan's core strategy was marginally ahead of the benchmark +17 bps. Royal London faced a challenging month, underperforming by -124 bps.

Market Commentary

Global equities sold off sharply early in the month in response to the Bank of Japan raising its benchmark interest rate from 0% - 0.1% to “around 0.25%” (the highest since 2008). The stock market rout began in Asia, where Japan's Nikkei 225 Index saw its worst single-day percentage drop since October 1987. The losses spilled over to other Asian equity markets, and then to the rest of the world. The MSCI All Countries World Index returned -2.66% (NZD, unhedged) in August, after it fell as much as 6% by the 5th August. The performance of the “Magnificent Seven” technology stocks was mixed; Meta Platforms (owner of Facebook) was the standout with a return of 4.2%, while Tesla dropped -12.4%. Nvidia, the posterchild of the artificial-intelligence (AI) frenzy, declined 3.2%. However, market concerns are growing that large technology companies could be overspending on AI infrastructure just as economic growth shows signs of slowing. Adding to these concerns was news that Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway disclosed that it had sold nearly half of its position in the iPhone maker Apple during the second quarter.

Fund Commentary (unhedged)

The underlying managers delivered mixed performance over the month. Stock selection contributed positively to the fund's performance in the information technology, financials, consumer discretionary and communication services sectors. However, it detracted in the healthcare, consumer staples and materials sectors. Top contributors:

Progressive - growth in car insurance policies is accelerating as the company continues to win market share, and the loss ratio continues to improve, resulting in higher profitability. The ad network and mediation platform company AppLovin Corp reported robust Q2 results. Operating within the rapidly growing mobile app industry, AppLovin benefits from increasing digital ad spend, as its software is designed to help game developers monetize players' experience through in-app purchases and collect and use data analytics to improve content. MercadoLibre's share price was boosted by solid Q2 results and an announcement by the company that it will invest USD 7 billion in Brazil and in Mexico during 2024. Both countries currently have below expected e-commerce penetrations in terms of real GDP growth, which demonstrates that MercadoLibre still has room to grow in both markets.

Top detractors: Dollar General's share price plunged more than 30%. The market punished the discount retailer after it reported fiscal second-quarter profit and sales below expectations and slashed its full-year outlook. The company's management attributed the weaker outlook to low-income households, that are feeling more 'financially constrained' compared to six months ago. Steel Dynamics fell almost 15% after a decline in steel pricing and increased uncertainty in the steel market. The company remains optimistic about steel demand and pricing dynamics for 2024 and sees strong market potential in Mexico for high-value products. The company also reported strong financial and operational performance in the second quarter of 2024 and continues to leverage its low carbon footprint for a competitive edge. Online retailer Amazon fell 9% in sympathy with its mega cap technology peers. An extremely high bar has been set for these players and investors are becoming increasingly nervous about the AI capex and depreciation cycle ahead. Furthermore, Amazon's customers in the retail business are starting to trade down, driving lower-than-expected guidance for Q3. Despite this, there remains significant growth potential for Amazon Web Services (AWS), driven by the ongoing transition from on-premise to the cloud.
